Finding buried drain manhole

Hi! I have bought recently a new property in Wybunbury. This house has blocked drains coming out the kitchen. Since the plot is from a quarter of an acre, it has long drains but it is expected to have a manhole on the property to allow the drains to be cleared. Without the location of the manhole I am not able to ask the help of a drain company to clear the drains. I expect the manhole with a metal cover to be buried 30cm to 50cm deep. The expected location is also known. I have already done some digging, but so far I was not lucky to find the manhole. The property was the new Vicarage built in Wybunbury in 1976. If someone is interested to make a scan through the whole property I am happy to give access to the outside of the house. Joao

Quote from Joao

"You did a perfect job. I am very pleased.

"I've been trying to get someone from the drains company to find out where this manhole would be. I have been calling guys two or three times and they never had the equipment,

"Now I called the detectorists and you found it. I'm really surprised, and I should have done this earlier.

I felt a bit stuck, and I felt "no way is someone coming for free to check". Then someone recommended you to me, and I was desperate so I checked on the [C&NMDS] website.

"I contacted you and it was really quick, I sent the email last evening and had someone here today. Thank you very much."
